Eliza Lucas Pinckney was a woman ahead of her time. During a time when young women were not educated to the extent that young men were, she was able to study in England and excelled in French, Music, and Botany. She returned to pre-revolutionary Charleston and ran her Father's Plantations while he was in Antigua as the Lieutenant Governor. During this time, he sent some seeds to Eliza as trial crops for the plantations to supplement the rice that was so popular during this time. Eliza tried her hand at growing ginger, cotton, and alfalfa. It was when she began experimenting with a strain of the indigo plant that she found success. It took three years, but Eliza was able to grow and process indigo in the Lowcountry. Due to the Eliza's efforts, indigo became second only to rice as the South Carolina colony's commodity cash crop, and contributed greatly to the wealth of its planters by 1748. Before the Revolutionary War, indigo accounted for more than one-third of the total value of exports from the colony.

At 22, Eliza married Charles Pinckney, a Chief Justice of South Carolina and the first Native-Born Attorney in the state. They gave birth to 4 children, three of whom grew to adulthood. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Minister to France, signer of the Constitution, and candidate for president. Thomas Pinckney was an ambassador to Great Britain, a member of the U.S. House, and a candidate for the vice-presidency. Her daughter, Harriott, ran the Hampton Plantation located on the Santee River. In 1791, George Washington came to visit Eliza. And, when she died two years later, he returned to the Lowcountry to serve as one of her pallbearers.

In 1989, Eliza became the first female to be inducted into the South Carolina Business Hall of Fame. She is recognized as one of the most prominent business persons of her time.
